

"GRIEF GOES OVER"

New Play for Brisbane

Not many playwrights have reaped the early success which has attended the efforts of Merton Hodge. His play, "The Wind and the Rain," seen in Brisbane last year has just finished a continuous run of nearly three years in London.

"Grief Goes Over" is another product of this author, and when the curtain goes up on this play at the Princess Theatre, Brisbane, on the 18th April it will probably be for the first time in Australia.

As choosing it as its opening production for 1936 and initiating its new policy of presenting plays every Saturday night, the Brisbane Repertory Theatre Society has selected a play which is full of human interest and one that will attract all shades of society. The fact that Sybil Thorn-dyke played the leading part in the London production sets the seal on its worthiness as a play demanding the attention of those who like the best in drama. "Grief Goes Over" will be played by the following cast: Gladys Parkinson, Clare Clarke, Vivienne Taylor, Darley Cooper, Edna Keane, Edith Rowett, Mavis Busch, Loftus Hyde, Jack Walsh and Jack Lynam. Dulcie Scott will have charge of the production.
